

#LoeriesRanking with... King James Group

 By Leigh Andrews

2 Feb 2018

What better way to creatively ease into the working year than with a reminder of some of last year's top contenders at the Loeries? We continue the local insights with King James.

Kennedy and Ross.

We've just entered February, the month King James Group celebrates its 20th birthday, but taking a look in the rear-view mirror, their 19th year was certainly one for the books. They strengthened their offering in combining Society and Punk to launch King James Digital.

Scopen agency of the year King James on hitting the new year running

And as one of the country's last remaining independent agencies, not only were they voted as SA's favourite and most successful agency in the Scopen AgencyScope 2017, also racking up accolades as second in creativity overall and most creative agency in Cape Town, as well as second most attractive agency on marketers' list to pitch; top for good momentum, productivity and original creative ideas; most desired agency to work for; one of the most balanced agencies in the country and the nation's top independent agency.

“ As of today the agencies formerly known as Society and Punk have combined to form King James Digital. Forward unto glory!       <https://t.co/xhgvFtODDt>— King James Digital (@KJDigitalSA) October 12, 2017 ”

As their calibre of work and creative problem-solving just gets better and better, we're expecting fantastic things from them in the months ahead.

“ We're so excited to share AAI & AAC's new #EqualityChallenge #advertiser guidelines&to announce that @KingJamesGroup is FIRST ad agency to endorse guidelines & fundamental principle of advancing #LGBTIQ equality through ads! CCO Alistair King ranked fifth in the chief creative officer table, with King Jamesers Matt Ross and Devin Kennedy ranked as joint-eighth in the executive creative director table, with Dan Pinch 10th and Jenny Ehlers 19th in the same table. The creative director ranking table also featured the regal Cameron Watson and Michael Wilson in joint-13th spot, with Watson and Elridge Marshall in joint-13th position on the agency art director table. Emma Drummond is ninth on the writer table, with Wilson and Vikash Gajjar in joint-17th position.

King James also featured in joint-13th in Creative Circle's interim rankings for 2017 in the individual agencies group, and joint-ninth in their agency group ranking table.

I caught up with Kennedy, executive creative director at King James Group "since the stone age," and Ross, chief creative officer with the Group "since the bronze age," now at the new King James Digital, to find out how they plan to extend their winning streak this year. As it's still the beginning of the year, they're "pretty much working on everything right now..."

What do you attribute your most recent successes to?

It was a satisfying result for us, especially on the number of integrated campaigns that were again recognised. It's a very clear affirmation for us that we are achieving what we set out for ourselves, as a group and with our clients. The breadth of our wins is evidence of the strength of our full group of agencies and the high calibre of their separate offerings.

Welcome King James Digital!

12 Oct 2017

What plans are already underway to better your ranking next year?

We're an idea-driven industry. And while you can try and put structures and systems in place to work better or smarter, it still comes down to coming up with surprising and challenging solutions. If you do that, the rest will follow.

How does the 2017 Loeries flock differ from your haul the previous year?

It was certainly up from our 2016 tally.
