Philips hosted an event that explored the use of music in the various segments of our lifestyles.

Audio technology is evolving to ensure that our constant need for entertainment and information is met, enabling us to run to the beat, game in audio isolation and concentrate in the workplace. Through features such as noise cancellation, music can be enjoyed more gently - even if it's just to block our excessive noise on your earphones when exercising in the gym.

In fact, Philips sells a set of headphones every second worldwide, due to the need for such audio equipment in almost every aspect of our media consuming world.

From experiencing how music inspires art, to the motivation required to keep spinning, guests were encourage to plug into various plug points around the room, and even join our music era dancers for a little dance time. With a 60's, 70's, 80's 90's and 'naughties' dancer - the event was a hub of activity and fun!
