Asian markets were mixed on Tuesday morning, with the Japanese Nikkei 225 unchanged and the Hong Kong Hang Seng index 1.58% lower. The Chinese Shanghai Composite gave back 2% amid profit-taking.

The Dow closed 0.26% firmer overnight.

At 9.50am, the all share index was flat (-0.07) at 54,599.1 points, with the blue-chip top 40 index 0.13% lower.

The resources index gave back 0.38%, while gold miners led the upside, adding 0.79%, followed by the platinum index the continued firmer, up 0.46%.

"The mixed tone in Asian markets, coupled with an inconsistent performance from resource counters in Australia this morning against the backdrop of a rand, which remains relatively resilient, will undermine outright momentum and, on balance, marginal profit-taking is likely for resource counters," Imara SP Reid said in a morning note.

US equities are likely to deliver "marginal losses" at the start of the session and investor attention is already turning toward the crucial employment figure due on Friday, the stockbrokerage said.
