

RIP Matthew Buckland

UPDATE: Details have been announced for Matthew Buckland's Cape Town memorial service.

Matthew Buckland

One of the SA digital media's industry's best-known players, having taken home the 'best individual contribution to digital' award at the 2017 Bookmark Awards, Matthew Buckland has passed away from cancer at the age of 45.

A year ago, Buckland spoke of how the Burn Media was set to embark on aggressive growth after a deal to go solo.

“ it is tragic @siyafrica he made such a difference in our team as well as the clients he helped us serve. This is a big loss for all of us professionally and personally #RIPMathewBuckland— Patricia Torres-Burd (@patburd) April 23, 2019 ”

“ Devasted to hear @matthewbuckland has passed away. He was one of the originals, helping shape digital in SA. See his tweets - they encapsulate his passions. (He was there when I signed up to Twitter at the Rat & Parrot 12 years ago - still a vivid memory) #RIPMatthewBuckland <pic.twitter.com/rfsU7ifHQQ>— Arthur Goldstuck (@art2gee) April 23, 2019 ”

Buckland often said what he loved most about the industry was:

“ Constant change, evolution, endless challenges. The constant ‘wow factor’. The strong feeling of “ownership” that our generation has over this industry as we were a part of shaping it — not the old industrialists and the “old money” of the past. ”

Digital news entrepreneur

Dubbed a 'digital news entrepreneur', Buckland was also head of the Mail & Guardian's online division, founder of the collaborative news and opinion platform Thought Leader from 2000 to 2007, established a division at Naspers' online publisher News24.com, and was also a consultant and investor at multinational media fund Media Development Investment Fund (MDIF).
